Update on Ros Quinlan, wife of Bishop Geoff Quinlan, in Cape Town – Bishop Geoff writes: For two or three weeks Ros began to regain some of her strength and was even able to go out to visit family and get away from the house. She has been fighting hard to get well by eating what she could and accepting various forms of complementary medicine, some of which were not all that pleasant. However, in the past week she has become much weaker and has begun to face up to the reality that this illness will be terminal, short of a miracle. We are working with a hospice sister to seek ways of helping Ros to go peacefully and without trauma. We continue to rely on your prayers. Thank you again for so many different kinds of support and encouragement even if, for those living in other countries, it has had to be from a distance.” Stop press: just before going to print we received the sadness that Ros Quinlan died Thursday night.

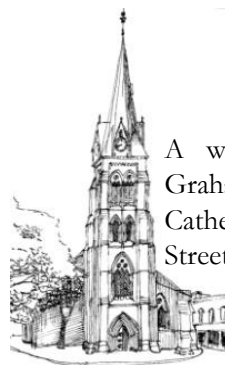

Baptism service: Our next parish Baptism service will be on Sunday 19 November. Preparation for Baptism will take place on Wednesday 15 November at 5:30 pm at the Cathedral. For Baptism applications, please speak to one of the Clergy.

Children's Church Closure: Next Sunday 19 November will unfortunately be the last Children's Church (English) for the year, as our students will be returning home. A very big thank you to our faithful and dedicated teachers. Rosa will be graduating and leaving Grahamstown, and Ayanda will return for her 3rd year in 2018.

Dean's Letter - Sunday 12th November 2017

Dear Cathedral Family

Today is Remembrance Sunday, the Sunday closest to November 11th. This remembrance goes back to the end of the First World War, Armistice Day, at 11 a.m, 11th November 1918, when the war finally ended: the 11th hour of the 11th day of the 11th month. As a way of remembering the immense loss and sacrifice of that war, it was decided, not long after the end of that war, to have a minute's silence every year at that time on that day. Since then, Remembrance Sunday has become a day when we remember all who have died in the many wars over the years: both the World Wars, and also the battles and wars since then, including our own wars here in South Africa.

On Church Square this morning, the military, representatives from many of our local schools, the Makana City Council led by Mayor Gaga, and others, will gather with old soldiers – veterans – to lay wreaths at the war memorial on the east side of the Cathedral, and to pray. This ceremony and these memories are being held all over the world today, at about this time.

I remember at Provincial Synod a few years back, looking at the young school children from St Dunstan's College, Benoni, who were acting as our helpers, and realising how grateful I was that they would not have to face conscription, or battles, or warfare – hopefully, at any rate. Like many white males my age, I was in the SADF, as it was then, after school, doing compulsory military service. I was shaped by it. In some ways, it was a rite of passage into manhood – as the military often is, in countries all over the world. But as we know, there was a political context to military conscription in SA, which, for many, makes the whole idea of conscription distasteful and unacceptable. Yet at the time I served with a degree of pride. It was only later that I became more aware of the way in which we were deeply divided as a country; that many black men my age would be on the other side; that many left the country to join MK and to fight for liberation. But now we are all together, in this country, to build and to make peace. I have immense respect for those who took a different path to the one I and others walked: those who refused the call-up, those who left the country, those who chose to fight, and those who chose other ways of working for our freedom.

We are, as many have said, in a new struggle as a country: a struggle for what is right, a struggle against poverty and inequality, a struggle for peace. There is fear, hatred, despair, seething anger; but there is also hope, love, and the grace of God. Let's continue to hold one another in prayer; and let's pray for all in our armed forces.

My love to you all

Andrew Hunter
